

Bahinskyi A. Modern socio-political conflicts in the structural dimension

The structure of socio-political conflicts has a multidisciplinary dimension. This touches the Ukrainian state, faced with the socio-political conflict and must develop and implement ways to overcome it. The conflict has many subjective dimensions, where each subject acts on the basis of its own social interests. At the same time, it follows from the writings of the classics that in order to overcome the conflict, institutional, rather than individual, efforts are required as social interests of the groups can be regulated at the societal level. Among the varieties of socio-political conflict, the most massive manifestation of violence is an armed conflict. The key political institution responsible for resolving the conflict remains the state. Strengthening non-state actors in the conflict is a characteristic feature of modern armed confrontation. Armed non-state actors use international politics to secure their social interests and positions. From the point of view of involving a variety of parties, not only the state, in conflict resolution, inclusive status as the broad participation of various social groups involved in the conflict in the negotiation process plays an important role in the negotiation strategy.

Key words: conflict, socio-political conflict, strategy, state, armed non-state actors, inclusion.
